

Digestive support

Tummy upsets and poor digestion can be a common complaint for our four-legged friends, and unpleasant for you and your pet to manage.

Diarrhoea, gurgly tums, excessive wind, reduced appetite, vomiting and bringing up bile can all signal something isn't quite right.

There are a wide range of causes of digestive problems, with some being easier to pinpoint than others. Some pets just have naturally more sensitive tummies, but a visit to your vet is often helpful, particularly if symptoms are severe or ongoing for more than 24 hours, to help identify the cause.

Some causes of digestive problems

- Allergies or food intolerances
- Age associated changes
- Scavenging
- Diet change
- Travel sickness
- Parasites

- Weaning
- · Viral or bacterial infections
- Twisted gut (this is an emergency)
- Medical conditions such as exocrine pancreatic insufficiency or pancreatitis

There are a few steps you can take to help prevent tummy troubles though... Keep potentially harmful food or objects out of your dog's reach, especially if they are prone to eating things they shouldn't! If you need to change your pet's diet, transition them slowly so their gut has time to adjust. Have a good worming routine in place, and if you think the issues might be allergy related a diary or exclusion diet can be helpful. And if you want to proactively address your pet's digestive health, we have natural herbal products that are specifically formulated to help to support the gut.
